“ I posted a note tonight on the New Haven's Paper's website after I learned that Jeanne Trapp had passed away. I lived on Cape Cod where Roberta, Jean's sister had many of her paintings in that little shop in Harwichport. I purchased at least 5 of her paintings but when I moved to Florida, I hurriedly sold two of the larger paintings thinking I wouldn't have a place for them. For two years, I have been so upset over selling those special paintings. What was I thinking? I still can remember both Jean and her sister, Roberta driving up to my house to deliver their work. A writer below comments on being spiritually guided by Jean's work. I too find it interesting that after two years, I would finally run an advertisement in the Cape Cod Times in search of those paintings that were sold in an estate sale. I wanted to find them and buy them back. I was fortunate enough to find one of them. The advertisement ran on the day Jean passed away. Tonight I saw her obituary, the day her beautiful painting was being shipped to me in Florida. I'll cherish that piece forever and hopefully, I'll be able to find the other painting of hydrangeas. I'm sorry for your loss, she was such a wonderful lady and her work was so beautiful.

“ I never knew Ms. Trapp nor her family, but I felt the need to share my story. I live in Norwich and just today dropped into the Goodwill store to browse. There, in the framed picture section, I happened to see a lovely little 6x6 painting entitled "Mama" Canada Goose #2, signed by Jeanne Trapp. I could tell it was done by someone with talent, so I Googled the name. Needless to say, the first thing that came up was her obituary, which led me to research her further and I realized I had the opportunity to save this piece from obscurity and give it a home where it will be loved and appreciated as piece of local art worth saving. In some strange way, I feel her spirit led me to this piece so her legacy as an artist would continue and her work could be enjoyed for years to come, even by those who never knew her. God Bless and peace be with your family. -HLF
